Hello

I hope you are well.

I was wondering whether to enter occupations involving making or designing film or movie props, designing the worlds of films, such as Avatar, making props in general, and other artistic regions of film production, and their occupations at WETA workshop, do you need to have academically excelled in Science and have high grades (8-9's in the UK; A*'s), top grades at A Level, or a science degree?

Could you give examples of the types of occupations I would be suited for if I have not done well in academics or in science at school?

Also is it true that WETA workshop is heavily involved in the Avatar sequels?

Many thanks

Tom Piccolo

Kia ora Tom,

Thank you so much for your interest in working with us at Wētā Workshop!

Required qualifications vary greatly between roles, and some don't require any qualifications at all, so it depends on what exactly you are applying for. For example, prop makers may not need any specific qualifications, but should have a background in art, crafting, or carpentry.

We encourage you to view and apply for our active job listings on our website, Careers at Wētā Workshop.

If you are interested in creating props specifically, you can apply for our Manufacturing Talent Pool.

To answer your second question, yes, Wētā Workshop was involved in Avatar: The Way of Water. Wētā Workshop created thousands of props for the film, while Wētā FX created the photorealistic CG environments. You can read more about Wētā FX's involvement here.

Wishing you all the best for your future endeavors!

Hello

Many thanks for your email.

I had 2 questions, marked 1) and 2) below. I would be grateful if you could answer each question in turn.

I noticed your job role is a “marketing and communications specialist”. I also have been receiving emails from a coding company stating that “in order to gain roles in marketing and communications” you need to know how to code, and have a computer science/STEM/physics background, or know those subjects very well”.

1) Is this true for your role?

2) Do the digital design roles at WETA require a computer science/STEM/physics background, or knowing those subjects very well?

Many thanks

Kia ora Tom,

No worries at all!

1. It depends on the type of Marketing role you're interested in. STEM skills are important particularly for digital marketing and market research, whereas communication and creative skills are useful for copywriting and advertising. It depends on the specific role/industry/company you are interested in working for. Speaking from strictly personal experience, I have not needed coding or STEM to pursue my roles, but this may be different for you.

2. Again, it depends on the role! But many digital roles – such as programming, engineering, or website development – do require a STEM background.

Unless you have any questions specific to our Game Studio, may I recommend forwarding your questions to our Talent Manager, Wesley, who I have cc'd in this email. If you have specific questions about Wētā Workshop's recruitment process, Wesley should be able to assist you.

Many thanks,

Hello

Thank you for your email.

Had just a few more questions to clarify this:

What about artistic and art/design based roles? Do you necessarily have to excelled in STEM subjects for those roles?

In the UK, we do these exams known as GCSE's which assess subjects like Maths, Biology, Chemistry, Physics and also English Language and Literature, involving the deep evaluation and analysis of literary texts.

I would also assume that for business and marketing, along with advertising and creative roles, excelling academically in any of the subjects above is not the key, or a requirement, but rather through non academic areas such as communication, practical skills and art based subjects if you are looking at advertising, business and creative roles.

Also, regarding "you need STEM to be a web developer", what about Wix, and other website design tools?

Many millions of people worldwide with no coding knowledge have made websites using applications that give them access to a wide range of things they can use to customise their own website.

I myself have made one, as I run a small music band with friends, and I have no coding or STEM knowledge:

Many thanks
