Dear Tom,

Thank you for your email.

The UCAT tests various measures that Medical Schools deem important for their students to have on the programme and in the medical profession. These qualities cannot be easily tested on a UCAS application form. These qualities can be situation judgement, different aspects of reasoning and decision making.

Aside from competition, A-Level requirements are usually set to reflect the rigour of the programme content.

GCSEs are a strong indicator for future success which we can objectively use for ranking purposes. Ranking is important to ensure we maintain a fair and consistent admissions process for all.

Kind regards,

Tom
